A: Why only the first 5 characters of the filename are taking up space? I can't see anything of which those 5 characters might point to on my computer; I did some digging and I think I found a possible answer. I have a "folder", an empty, unnamed folder on my hard disk (on my Mac it's called "/Volumes/Macintosh HD/Users/niels"). When my library is empty (no apps are open and the library folder is empty), the disk is 21.88GB in size. When my library is full, it is 32.56GB. This seems to rule out the fact that you're actually using an older "stack" of files. However, here's the kicker: the empty folder is 21.88GB in size, as well as the full one. When a folder is empty, the metadata indicating that it is empty resides on the root folder, which doesn't take up any space. However, when the folder is full, that root folder expands to accommodate the hidden system files and the hidden directory containing the directory structure for the root folder. This is shown in the debug information for an empty folder, which looks like this: @rdar_name: /Volumes/Macintosh HD/Users/niels/QuickLook/0/
